

Homelessness

Homeless people did not grow up to become homeless. I think that most of them did not have a good education or parents to help them make better choices as they grew up. Not having made good choices made their economic situation bad. To have a home, a good family and the better things in life are what a homeless person lacks.

Some of them may be depressed, abandoned, and mentally sick. There is no one to guide them in their daily lives, so they become homeless. They live in abandoned buildings, under bridges or in open fields under a box or tent.

Jesus Berumen, 8th Grade, RYSS