

Homelessness

It is sad how many people are out in the streets, especially young kids. Seeing kids my age out in the streets, and knowing they need things while I'm asking my mom for expensive things doesn't seem right. They don't even have something to eat. What really surprises me is that military veterans are homeless. This is weird because I thought veterans wouldn't be homeless. They shouldn't be homeless. They should at least have money and a place for what they did for our country.

Most cities have something for the homeless. Many people are homeless because of natural disasters, which makes their homes uninhabitable for a long period of time. It is sad how many children are homeless. Many people leave their homes because they don't have a well-paying job. Homeless people have a greater risk for diseases and death. Many of these people are dying because they don't have money for food and somewhere to live. There are women out there that have children, and they are raising them alone. Some women are homeless because of their baby's daddy. When a dad isn't responsible, he leaves the mother alone with her child.

It is sad when you see someone in the streets asking for money. I wish there was a place where all the homeless could go, stay there, and get everything they needed. If there was something like this, then I don't think there would be as many homeless people in the streets. It is sad when you see little children asking for food or money. Children shouldn't be out there trying to get money from people. They should be in school learning, and trying to be someone better.

When we are worrying about our love problems and other problems that really don't matter, the homeless people are worrying about where they are going to sleep at night, where they are going to get food for the next day, and where they are going to look for money. It is sad us worrying about things that really don't matter when they are worrying about more important things. We cry to our mom that we want a phone, a laptop and many expensive things when they barely have something to wear.

Whenever you see someone you usually don't think about their life, how they survive, what struggles they have been through, or has anything bad happened to them. We should know these things about the homeless so we can help them. Homelessness is not a joke. It is a serious thing. Many people are homeless because they get laid off from their job, and their family members won't help them with somewhere to live.

I'm not trying to be racist, but there are actually more White people and African Americans homeless in the streets than Mexicans. The reason is because Mexicans care about each other. If people help others out with a place to sleep and something to eat, then they probably won't be in the streets and homeless.
