

Creating the future we want

How would you create your future? I would start by making the world a better place to live. A better future is a world with no destruction. I want my dream to come true, and I want people to live better lives.

To make the world a better place we have to send a message to everybody in the world so we can make it happen. I want to see less people on the streets asking for money because they can't afford food to eat. I want to see homeless people succeed, and have great careers. I want to see everyone go to college, and graduate so they can have better lives.

I want to stop pollution. The way that we can make this happen is to tell everyone to stop polluting the world. If we can stop this we can save many animals from dying and becoming extinct. Many people don't care about animals and pollution. They don't care if animals die. This is why we should tell everyone to stop polluting the world.

We have to stop wars, and make peace so that there is no destruction in the world. I want everyone to live in peace. Wars just make destruction. This isn't right.

I want to have more technology in the world so other people can experience this. Many countries don't have much technology. People struggle to do their homework because they don't have computers to help them. It will be great for them to have access to computers.

I want to have better health care so people don't die because they can't get enough care. Some places don't have good hospitals. People die because of this. I think there should be good hospitals everywhere. A place like Haiti doesn't have good hospitals and medicine.

Esmeralda Gutierrez, 8th Grade, RYSS