

Creating the future we want

To create a really good future, first we must know what's wrong with the present. They say yesterday is history, tomorrow is the future, and today is a gift. This is why it's called a present. To know how to create a good future, we must learn from our mistakes.

We are advancing towards making wonders. Sixty years ago, we had dreams of seeing people walk on the moon, and look at us now, we have rovers on Mars, and we know that there's a planet just like Earth somewhere in Space. The only way we are going to succeed in the future is if we stop the violence and hate, and start thinking about where we are going to be in a few years. Am I going to be caught up in all of this? Am I going to be the one curing diseases, or even making a peace treaty between two countries?

This world could not have existed if the people did not have the determination to create it, shape it, and nurture it like a baby. Yes, the Earth is our child, and we must protect it in many ways. The people who are advancing technology are amazing. We also need to talk about how we can make peace and help each other. Why can't we be like the Indians and the French of the past? They helped, and supported each other through trade, and showing each other how to do things.

Our enemies have something we want, and we have something they want. How are we going to get these things, by stealing? No, we can get them through trading. If we have close bonds, we can offer, and in return, ask. There will be no violence and panic. There will be two sides making an equal trade.

If we were in a war, I would want to talk to both sides and ask why they are fighting? I would make a compromise, and of course see it work. They say together we stand, apart we fall. America has enemies, and to make them our friends, we must stop the hate, and reach out. The present is now, the future is tomorrow, but first, we need to nurture the present so it can show us the way to peace. Once we make our present good and safe, we can make the future we want.

To create the future we want, we should have cars powered by waste and not by dangerous and expensive nuclear energy. We need to remove the trash from the oceans, beaches, rivers and everywhere else. Cleaning up is just a step towards the future everyone wants. Utopia is what we want, right? But how can we think about this if we can't fix what's wrong today. I'm sure about one thing. If we all work, and try hard, we can really succeed in making this dream a reality.

Francisco Rosas, 8th Grade, RYSS,